About us

Who we are

The National Foundation for Deaf and Hard of Hearing (NFDHH) is a trusted national charity dedicated to improving hearing health outcomes across Aotearoa New Zealand. We work to prevent hearing loss, support access to hearing care, promote inclusion, and advocate for equitable hearing health services for all.

880,000+*

New Zealanders are Deaf or hard of hearing

Hearing health affects how people learn, work, connect and participate in everyday life — yet it remains one of the most under-addressed areas of public health.

What we do

NFDHH delivers programmes and advocacy across the life course — from early childhood prevention and school-based hearing checks, through to support for older adults, inclusive workplaces and sector leadership. Our work is grounded in evidence, lived experience and strong partnerships with communities, funders and the hearing sector.

We also support youth voice and leadership through our Youth Advisory Group (YAG), ensuring that young people with lived experience help inform programme design, education initiatives and future-facing work, including prevention and safe listening.

How we are governed

NFDHH is governed by an experienced Board and guided by our Member Organisations, who bring sector expertise and leadership across hearing health, disability, education and research. Together, they support strong governance, collaboration and a shared commitment to improving hearing health outcomes nationwide.

Chair's report

Stewardship, confidence and long-term impact

The National Foundation for Deaf and Hard of Hearing (NFDHH) exists to create lasting improvement in hearing health outcomes for people across Aotearoa New Zealand. In 2025, the Board's focus remained on ensuring the organisation was well governed, financially resilient, and positioned to deliver impact both now and into the future.

Operating in a challenging economic environment, the Board is pleased with the organisation's stability and performance over the year. Through strong governance, active risk management, and prudent financial oversight, NFDHH has continued to deliver its mission while safeguarding the long-term sustainability of the organisation.

A key responsibility of the Board is to ensure that strategy, risk and resources are aligned. In 2025, this included overseeing diversified funding approaches, monitoring financial performance, and supporting investment decisions that balance immediate community need with future impact. The Board remains confident that NFDHH is well positioned to navigate ongoing uncertainty while continuing to grow its reach and influence.

The Board has also been encouraged by progress in areas requiring long-term, sector-wide leadership. The continued development of a National Hearing Health Strategy, aligned with the World Health Organization's World Report on Hearing, reflects NFDHH's credibility and role as a trusted contributor to national conversations on hearing health policy and systems change.

Strong governance is only effective when paired with strong leadership and delivery. On behalf of the Board, I would like to acknowledge Chief Executive Natasha Gallardo, the leadership team, staff and volunteers for their professionalism, integrity and commitment throughout the year. Their work ensures NFDHH's strategy is translated into meaningful outcomes for Deaf and hard of hearing communities.

I would also like to thank our donors, funders and partners for their continued trust. Your support enables the Board to steward this organisation with confidence and to ensure NFDHH remains focused on impact, accountability and long-term change.

Through strong governance, active risk management, and prudent financial oversight, NFDHH has continued to deliver its mission while safeguarding the long-term sustainability of the organisation.

CEO's report

Turning support into impact

Hearing health shapes how people learn, work, connect and participate in everyday life. In 2025, the National Foundation for Deaf and Hard of Hearing remained focused on one clear priority: turning support into practical, measurable impact for Deaf and hard of hearing people across Aotearoa New Zealand.

Throughout the year, our programmes continued to reach people at every stage of life. From early childhood education and school-based hearing checks, through to community education, workplace inclusion and support for older New Zealanders, our teams worked alongside communities to respond to need where it was greatest.

This impact is made possible by trust. Donors, funders and partners enable us to act — whether that means supporting a child to hear clearly in the classroom, helping someone access hearing aids when cost is a barrier, or delivering hearing health education in communities where access has historically been limited. The stories throughout this report reflect the very real difference that support makes in people's lives.

In 2025, we also continued to strengthen how we work with communities. Our Pasifika Community Engagement Programme reinforced the importance of culturally grounded delivery, while consultation with the Deaf community on emerging technologies — including the NZSL Avatar — demonstrated our commitment to listening first and co-designing solutions. These approaches ensure our programmes remain relevant, trusted and effective.

Alongside delivery, we invested in leadership and systems change. Our contribution to the development of a National Hearing Health Strategy reflects our commitment to evidence-informed practice and to shaping long-term change beyond individual programmes.

Looking ahead, the priorities outlined in our 2026 roadmap build directly on this momentum. We will continue to expand prevention and early intervention, strengthen access and inclusion, and deepen partnerships — guided by equity, lived experience and measurable impact.

I would like to sincerely thank our donors, funders and partners for their generosity and belief in this work. I also want to acknowledge the dedication of the NFDHH team and volunteers. Their care, professionalism and commitment sit behind every programme delivered and every person reached. It is a privilege to work alongside them as we continue to build a more inclusive and hearing-healthy future.

From early childhood education and school-based hearing checks, through to community education, workplace inclusion and support for older New Zealanders, our teams worked alongside communities to respond to need where it was greatest.

Our impact in 2025

1. Prevention and early intervention

Impact at a glance

Why this matters

Nearly 60% of childhood hearing loss is preventable. Early education and timely screening help children develop safe listening habits and identify hearing issues before they affect learning, confidence and long-term wellbeing.

Community voice

Early hearing check changed Luke's future

When 14-year-old Luke took part in our school hearing screening, it revealed a hearing issue that had gone unnoticed for years. What adults once assumed was “not listening” suddenly made sense. The screening provided clarity, early referral, and access to support at a critical time — helping Luke and his family understand what was happening and take action before it affected his learning, wellbeing, and confidence. As a passionate young musician, Luke is now better equipped to protect his hearing and navigate the next steps in his journey, showing how early intervention can be truly life-changing

Why this matters

Early childhood is a critical period for establishing safe listening habits. The Sound Monkey makes sound levels visible and understandable, helping children learn about safe listening from an early age.

Community voice

“The children just love the Sound Monkey and keep an eye on its smile. They are very quick to notice the change of colour and tell staff. The older children tell the younger children that they have to be quiet because the monkey’s smile has changed.”

The cost of hearing aids remains a significant barrier for many New Zealanders. Without support, hearing loss can affect work, family life, mental health and social connection.

How the Hearing Aid Fund restored relief and stability

In early 2024, 34-year-old Ripeka suddenly lost hearing in her right ear following a period of illness and high stress. What began as a loud, persistent squealing quickly developed into severe hearing loss and constant tinnitus.

Months of medical appointments brought little resolution. Everyday life became exhausting — work, parenting, and social situations all felt harder as background noise overwhelmed her ability to process speech.

When an audiologist confirmed severe sensorineural hearing loss and recommended a hearing aid, the cost presented a significant barrier. Through the Hearing Aid Fund, Ripeka was able to access support without delay.

“The biggest change has been the reduction in tinnitus,” she shares. “The constant ocean-like sound has quietened to the point where I barely notice it. That relief has made everyday life manageable again.”

The Fund provided more than financial assistance — it offered timely intervention at a critical moment, restoring clarity, reducing stress, and helping Ripeka regain control.

Now a regular supporter of NFDHH, Ripeka pays forward the support she received so others facing hearing loss can access the help they need.

“I am truly grateful for the generosity of donors, who make the Hearing Aid Fund possible.”

Hearing support helped us stay connected

At Remuera Rise retirement village, residents John and Gillian know firsthand what it means to rediscover connection through better hearing.

“I thought I was answering people’s questions,” John recalls, “but too often I found out I’d answered the wrong one. I simply hadn’t heard properly.” For Gillian, it was her family who finally made her realise: “Mum, you’re not listening. Listen to us.”

Like so many senior New Zealanders, hearing loss crept in slowly — unnoticed at first, then life-changing. Gillian says getting hearing aids transformed her social life:

“I can join the group conversations again, especially at happy hour. Before, I would just sit quietly. Now I’m part of it.”

John is quick to point out that hearing health isn’t just about conversation. “As your programme is demonstrating, it is so important to keep your hearing to protect your cognitive ability as we get older. Hearing loss contributes to early onset dementia. If you don’t want to go down that track, you really should do something about it.”

This is why our Retirement Village Outreach Programme goes beyond free hearing checks. We deliver workshops that explain how untreated hearing loss can accelerate cognitive decline — and how early intervention, like hearing aids, can help protect memory, independence, and quality of life.

“As your programme is demonstrating, it is so important to keep your hearing to protect your cognitive ability as we get older.” John Workplaces play a critical role in enabling Deaf and hard of hearing people to participate fully in employment. Practical awareness, accessible communication and organisational commitment support inclusive cultures and better outcomes.

Workplace inclusion in practice

Through the Hearing Accredited Workplace Programme, organisations across Aotearoa are embedding hearing awareness into everyday workplace practice. Training and accreditation help employers move beyond compliance toward meaningful inclusion.

Across the programme, participating organisations report increased confidence, improved accessibility practices and a stronger shared understanding of hearing inclusion — creating workplaces where people can contribute fully and feel supported.

Westpac continues to demonstrate what genuine workplace inclusion looks like in practice. Through their Hearing Accredited Workplace (HAWP) journey, teams across Westpac have embedded practical changes that improve accessibility for Deaf and hard of hearing staff and customers — from live captioning as standard practice in meetings to inclusive emergency procedures and acoustically considered workspaces. By pairing policy with action, Westpac has shown how learning builds empathy and leads to meaningful, organisation-wide change.

Respectful, culturally grounded engagement

Through the Pasifika Community Engagement Programme, NFDHH delivered hearing screenings and education in trusted community settings. In one Tongan community group, screenings revealed significant unmet need, reinforcing the importance of culturally responsive approaches and clear referral pathways.
